"My 17 year old's boyfriend died of a drug overdose 3 weeks ago. I can't stop her friends from doing drugs, but I can give them this [naloxone]."

Harm reduction supports people who use drugs (PWUD) by emphasizing safety and overdose prevention over judgment. Recognizing that not all PWUD are ready to stop using drugs or enter treatment, harm reduction aims to meet them where they are and promote safer practices. This compassionate, person-centered approach enhances public health and individual well-being through access to treatment, naloxone, overdose prevention education, safe use supplies, wound care, and safe syringes.
